With museum objects and collections still at the core of what they fundamentally stand for, the digital age will continue and museums will both embrace and also wait and watch developments. In the next ten years, museums will see significant change as they are greatly affected by external influences including society culture, funding.

Museums as media companies? It may seem like a bit of a stretch, but as museums reposition themselves for our new digital age they are becoming more than physical places to visit. Like never before, museums are throwing open their digital doors to a wider audience and giving virtual visitors a behind-the-scenes look at their work and the stories surrounding the objects in their collections.

The entry of the digital into the (art) museum can only be understood within a larger historical context: for example, in debates on science and media theory, the introduction of zero in the Arab region around the year 1000, the dual system developed by Leibniz around 1700, and material innovations (e.g. tabulating machine) are seen as of decisive importance for the emergence of digital technology. But what conditions were necessary for the development of a digital culture in art museums?
