Urban history is a field of history that examines the historical nature of cities and towns, and the process of urbanization. The approach is often multidisciplinary, crossing boundaries into fields like social history, architectural history, urban sociology, urban geography, business history, and archaeology. Urbanization and industrialization were popular themes for 20th-century historians, often tied to an implicit model of modernization, or the transformation of rural traditional societies.

The Origins of the Urban Crisis: Race and Inequality in Postwar Detroit is the first book by historian and Detroit native Thomas J. Sugrue in which he examines the role race, housing, job discrimination, and capital flight played in the decline of Detroit. Sugrue argues that the decline of Detroit began long before the 1967 race riot.

The conference was organised by Jim Dyos, subsequently professor of urban history at Leicester, whose vision of what constituted urban history ('a field of knowledge, not a single discipline a focus for a variety of forms of knowledge, not a form of knowledge in itself') shaped the development of the subject in the UK through the 1960s and 1970s. His contribution to the establishment of urban history in this country subsequently became known as the 'Dyos phenomenon'. Dyos died in 1978, but ...

Traditionally, the Greek philosopher Hippodamus (5th century BC) is regarded as the first town planner and 'inventor' of the orthogonal urban layout. Aristotle called him "the father of city planning", and until well into the 20th century, he was indeed regarded as such. This is, however, only partly justified.

The modern origins of urban planning lie in a social movement for urban reform that arose in the latter part of the 19th century as a reaction against the disorder of the industrial city. Many visionaries of the period sought an ideal city, yet practical considerations of adequate sanitation, movement of goods and people, and provision of amenities also drove the desire for planning.

Urban Outfitters was the first brand of the URBN portfolio to cross the Atlantic in 1998, opening a store on Kensington High in London. Eleven years later, Anthropologie followed, opening a store on Regent Street, (also in London) that spans 11,000 square feet across three floors. Soon after, the brand opened another location nearby on Kings Road.
