The teaching guides developed for Elementary schools were created to support 5th grade American history content standards and learning frameworks. They present lesson ideas for each chapter and also groups of chapters called Parts. Part activities help to set context for reading and present overview concepts for the chapters, as well as introduce timeline and map concepts to help frame understanding. Part summaries include project and activity ideas. Chapter lessons are presented in an Ask-Discuss-Write format and focus heavily on nonfiction literacy skill and reading comprehension concepts. In addition, each Chapter lesson includes additional activities to reinforce reading skills, vocabulary retention and differentiated instruction. Reproducible assessments, worksheets graphic organizers and rubrics are found at back. About the Series: Master storyteller Joy Hakim has excited millions of young minds with the great drama of American history in her award-winning series A History of US. A positive and affirming look at skin color, from an artist's perspective. Seven-year-old Lena is going to paint a picture of herself. She wants to use brown paint for her skin. But when she and her mother take a walk through the neighborhood, Lena learns that brown comes in many different shades. Through the eyes of a little girl who begins to see her familiar world in a new way, this book celebrates the differences and similarities that connect all people. Karen Katz created The Colors of Us for her daughter, Lena, whom she and her husband adopted from Guatemala six years ago.

While working at Charter School X, an independent study school, I found that the majority of 11th grade U.S. History students read at a seventh and eighth grade level. Students had difficulty with comprehension, engagement, and retention of the textbook that was written at an 11th grade reading level and meant for a traditional high school classroom. Thus, I designed a month long unit on the American Industrial Revolution written between a seventh and eighth grade reading level and created lessons for independent study to increase interest, understanding, and retention. Sources of Data: I used numerous sources to create the lessons, such as various U.S. History textbooks, primary sources, and the Library of Congress. Conclusions Reached: The American Industrial Revolution unit helped 11th grade U.S. History students at a seventh and eighth grade reading level with comprehension, engagement, and retention. Since the assignments and resources were written at the students reading level and included activities designed for independent study, students were able to understand the academic material and had the motivation to deepen their learning. Students completed the four-week long independent study unit and gained a greater understanding of the material.
